Dear Professor Parker:

Thank you for calling my attention to the book Strategic Military Deception, edited by Donald C. Daniel and Katherine L. Herbig. We plan on using this work as reference material in our training programs in intelligence analysis.

The book contains a number of well researched reviews of important strategic deception operations together with keen analyses and provocative interpretations. The articles suggest the wisdom of applying similar analytical approaches to the study of deception as a tool in international political and economic relations.

The editors have provided a good foundation for systematic study of these operations in their introductory chapter. They are to be commended for their success in tying the varied contributions into an integrated whole.

Thank you, once again.

Sincerely,

William J. Casey
